A good typing game with a good soundtrack. Well, I don't think anyone would read this if not already a fan of the original Epistory game.... I was actually just searching for a game to practice my typing speed. Apparently I've stumbled upon a jewel which otherwise would've never noticed.

First of all the story is so easy to delve into, and when I notice the world detail it appears to be so alive and vibrant. It's already refreshing just looking at the game itself. It may be just me but seeing the squirrels swarming the ground and the tiny details alongside the wonderful and chilly music is a great experience by itself. The vivid colors and low-poly style only make the game more lighthearted and enjoyable.

The mechanics are so simple yet brilliant, this combustion between an exploration-adventure game and arcade action is just fantastic, not to mention that it actually pushes me to type faster and with higher accuracy. I also like the extra "skills" which add even more flavor.

Finally, the world itself, I can't avoid mentioning the wonderful animations and unfolding effect of the world, also I really like the way the world diverges to different paths, the ancient, hell even the unaccessibile areas are noted in such a beautiful way, this attention to detail and terrain/world builing in this game is fantastic in my opinion.

This game is a must have.. While I really enjoyed the Soundrack, "Desert Dream" is absent from the OST, which was the major reason I decided to spend $5 on the soundtrack. Extremely disappointing that the song was absent from the OST and not indicated on the purchase page. Since soundtracks are non-refundable, I guess I'm out of luck.
